* Lovell's Hall, in the Parish of Terrington St. Clement's, near Lynn, is an old gabled mansion standing in a small park, about a mile south of the church, on the road leading to Tilney. It is believed to have been built, or rebuilt, in 1543, and was of larger extent than it is now. The lower stage and the projecting porch are of Barnack stone; the upper stages are of brick. It contains an old panelled room, and the walls are in some places four or five feet thick. The Manor of Lovell's Hall is not mentioned separately in Blomefield's 'History of Norfolk,' (ix. 84), but it seems to be the same as that originally called "Bardolph's Fee," of which "the whole right was in the Lovells," before 1416; when Thomas Lovell, of Barton Bendish, Norfolk, presented to the Chapel of St. James, now destroyed. By his will, dated Sept. 10, 9th Henry V., he gives it to his second son Nicholas, who was united with "Howard's Manor" in the same parish. But the family of Ichiers resided at Lovell's Hall, and held the manor for a very long time before 1688, when it was sold to Thoroughgood Upwood; and both Howard's and Lovell's Manors still exist, separately. There are views of the house in Mason's 'Norfolk Photographically Illustrated;' and in Willins's 'Old Halls and Manor Houses of Norfolk.'
